

The Baltimore gun club

It was during the great Civil War of the United States, that a new and very influential club started in Baltimore, Maryland. Every body knows the astonishing energy with which the military instinct suddenly developed itself in that ship-building, engineering, and commercial nation. Shop keepers who had hardly ever heard of West Point, jumped from their counters into the position of captains, colonels and even generals. Their knowledge of the art of war soon almost equalled that of the great masters of the old world, and, like them too, they won victories by enormous discharges of bullets, men, and greenbacks. But in gunnery especially the Americans even surpassed their brethren in Europe. Not that their arms ever reached a higher degree of precision; but they were constructed on a scale of such extraordinary dimensions that ranges were soon attained that had never before been known..
