Death of Adams and Jefferson.--On July 4, 1826, two ex-Presidents, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, died. By a singular and interesting coincidence their death took place on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, which one of them had written and the other aided to prepare. John Adams had the special gratification of living to see his son President of the United States. Removal of the Creek Indians.--An important act of the Adams administration was the removal of the Creek Indians from their old domain. The Federal government had agreed in 1802 to remove these Indians from Georgia, and in 1819 that State called on the government to fulfil its agreement. Steps were taken, and in 1825 some of the Creek chiefs, acting on their own authority, agreed to cede the tribal lands and accept new ones beyond the Mississippi. This was a trick which the tribe repudiated, and the chiefs who made the treaty were put to death. Georgia tried to take possession, and for a time an Indian war was threatened. In 1826 a new treaty was made, in which the Creeks agreed to removal, parting with most of their land, and accepting new lands in the West. The Cherokees, another tribe of Georgia Indians, were removed at a later date. Anti-Masonic Party.----A new political party arose in an unusual manner. William Morgan, a member of the society of Freemasons, published a book in 1826 in which he professed to reveal the secrets of the society. He disappeared, and it was believed by many that the Masons had murdered him.-The feeling against the society became so strong that it gave rise to
