

Shanghai Unanchor Travel Guide - 2 Days in Shanghai: A Budget-Conscious Peek at Modern China

This itinerary is perfect for those who:  Seek a cheap way to see Shanghai with your budget options clearly laid out.  This itinerary was made with the budget-conscious traveler in mind. Traveling can be expensive if you dont know where youre going or what to prepare for, especially in a city like Shanghai. I have carefully laid out your options based on price versus convenience, ensuring that the fastest route is often times the cheapest, most interesting method of getting there.  Want an introduction to modern China and a look at its traditional side.  Shanghai is the face of modern China acting as the financial center of the country, yet it still retains many of its historical buildings and cultural areas (The Bund, French Concession, Yu Garden, etc.); so I have carefully created an intriguing balance between new and old to share with you.  Want to avoid tourist traps, mundane areas, and an all-around uninteresting time.  Shanghai is a big city. Youve likely already read about 100+ places, restaurants and areas of Shanghai that are allegedly must-see. The reality is that the majority are not and you have limited time to figure that out for yourself. I have over 5 years of experience living in Shanghai and showing off the city to friends. To put it simply; I know where you should go.  Want to experience the best of local cuisine, culture, and shopping.  China is home to more than just General Tsos meager offerings. I have prepared several recommendations, local and international, based around the areas you will be exploring, giving you the option to be as adventurous as youd like to be. This also applies to specifically what shops will have the most unique items and what to avoid.  Do not want to get lost and spend more time seeing/doing than asking for directions and taking taxis.  I have crafted custom-made maps for every area, all of them current with destinations and directions clearly laid out, so you can spend more time exploring and less time worrying about where you are.  Want up-to-date information and local insight. **

Shanghai changes every week, with new restaurants opening and closing all the time. All of the costs, directions, and recommendations are current and will be updated immediately if there are any changes.
