

Adventures in the Apache Country: A Tour Through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada

John Ross Browne (1821-1875), was an Irish-born American traveler, artist, writer and government agent. The style of his writings influenced a number of authors such as Mark Twain, Bret Harte and Dan De Quille. In 1849, at the time of the California Gold Rush, Browne moved to California and worked in various jobs for the government, as an agent for the Treasury Department, surveyor of customs houses and mints, investigator of Indian and Land Office affairs, and official reporter for the state constitutional convention. He published parts of these experiences in the popular press as From Crusoes Island (1864). He then went on a trip to Europe and the Middle East, published his impressions serially at Harpers Magazine and then in book form as Yusef (1853). Browne and his family moved in 1861 to Germany, an experience that resulted in An American Family in Germany (1866), with Brownes side trips detailed in The Land of Thor (1866). In 1863 he returned to the American West, vividly describing Arizona, Sonora and other regions in his Adventures in the Apache Country (1869). Mr. Brownes zeal as a traveller and his competence in description and illustration are too well known to need a new indorsement. The glory and shame, the processes and reactions of civilization, the simplicity and the pollution of barbarism, are here depicted by a most effective pencil. Browne writes: I have now to offer a new programme of exploration and adventure, very different indeed from our last, but possessing peculiar charms in the absence of accommodation for travellers, and extraordinary advantages in the way of burning deserts, dried rivers, rattlesnakes, scorpions, Greasers, and Apaches; besides unlimited fascinations in the line of robbery, starvation, and the chances of sudden death by accident. From the borders of the Arctic circle to Arizona the transition will at least afford us a new sensation of some sort; and if we fail to make the trip remunerative either in novelty of scenery or incident it will be our own fault.
