Not illustrated. 1736 Excerpt: ...As for the Receipt for my Rent, which I had paid beforehand, and several other Things I had bought, they did not think fit to restore them, nor was ever, any farther Mention made of them. In the mean time, I still persisted in demanding an Interpreter, or that I might be carried before the Goyernourj bur. allIntreaties on thisHead were fruitless. I then perceived I must prepare to return to Petersburg, and consequently undergo the Fatigue of a Journey of 5 or 600 Leagues: For this End, I was desirous at least to buy Necessaries to screen me from the Cold; But no Body could or would understand me, and I was wholly ignorant what would be my Fate. The next Day, a Man broughtmy printed Books, which he lockd up in my Trunk, leaving only a jlufsmn Almanack, with a little Dictionary, in my Disposal. They likewise allowed me some Shirts; but every Thing else was locked up and scaled. About Four in the Afternoon, I was carried, by a Guard pf a Serjeant and two Soldiers, to one of the Suburbs of the City, where I lay, that Night, in the House of a Peasant; And here it was that I began to bully in earnest. I had delivered my Sword, as I have observed above, to the City-Major, and it had been kept in my Prison: When they carried me away, I bid the Serjeant take it with him: But the Officer of the Guard, who probably took a Liking to it, refused it, under Pretext, as far-as I could understand, that the Major would fend it after me. After having waited for it, some Time, in vain, I told the Serjeant I was resolved not to go away without my Sword. I spoke to him of it, with such an Air of Authority, that he, at length, thought fit to go for it, and brought it me in a Moment. Happily for me, the Woman of the House where I was, had a Sheep-skin Pelt, quite new, which she ...
