

The Doings of Raffles Haw

Im afraid that he wont come, said Laura McIntyre, in a disconsolate voice. Why not? Oh, look at the weather; it is something too awful. As she spoke a whirl of snow beat with a muffled patter against the cosy red-curtained window, while a long blast of wind shrieked and whistled through the branches of the great white-limbed elms which skirted the garden. Robert McIntyre rose from the sketch upon which he had been working, and taking one of the lamps in his hand peered out into the darkness.
