Not illustrated. 1866 Excerpt: ...must be particularly pleasing to one, whose only hope of being introduced to your regard is through the recommendation of an art in which you are a master.--But I forget what I have been declaring above, and must therefore turn my eyes to the following sheets. I am not ignorant that, when offered to your perusal, they are put into the hands of one of the finest, and consequently the most indulgent judges of the age: but as there is no mediocrity in Poetry, so there should be no limits to its ambition.--I venture directly on the trial of my fame.--If what I here present you has any merit to gain your approbation, I am not afraid of its success; and if it fails of your notice, I give it up to its just fate. This advantage at least I secure to myself, an occasion of thus publicly declaring that I am with the profoundest veneration, Sir, your most devoted, humble servant, James Thomson. JHE First Edition of Spring was dedicated as follows:--TO THE EIGHT HON. THE COUNTESS OF HERTFORD. Madam, I have always observed that in addresses of this nature, the general taste of the world demands ingenious turns of wit, and disguised artful periods, instead of an open sincerity of sentiment flowing in a plain expression. From what secret impatience of the justest praise, when bestowed on others, this often proceeds, rather than a pretended delicacy, is beyond my purpose here to inquire. But as nothing is more foreign to the disposition of a soul sincerely pleased with the contemplation of what is beautiful, and excellent, than wit and turn; I have too much respect for your Ladyships character, either to touch it in that gay, trifling manner, or venture on a particular detail of those truly amiable qualities of which it is composed.
