

The Purple Wig (Father Brown)

The librarian turned to him and seemed to forget my presence; he was strongly moved and, I think, a little heated with wine. I don't know how you know it, Father Brown, he said, but you are right. He lets the whole world do everything for him except dress him. And that he insists on doing in a literal solitude like a desert. Anybody is kicked out of the house without a character who is so much as found near his dressing-room door.
