Not illustrated. 1765 Excerpt: ...opinion of wise men, too great a strain upon the prerogative; especially giving a detail of particulars, which, in the variety of events, cannot be ascertained during the course of a treaty.--I could easily answer the objection of your graces friends in relation to the Dutch, and why they made those dissiculties at the Hague and Gerlruydenberg. And when the whole story of these two last intriguing years comes to be published, the world will have other notions of our proceedings. This perhaps will not be long untold, and might already have been, if other people had been no wiser than. I. After all, my lord, I grant that, from a distant view of things, abundance of objections may be raised against many parts of our conduct. But the difficulties which gave room to these objections are not seen, and perhaps some of them will never appear j neither may it be convenient-dvey should. If in the end it appears, that we have made a good bargain for you, we hope you will take it without euteting too nicely into the circumstances. T will not undertake to defend our proceedings against any man who will not allow this postulatam, that it was imposijble to carry on the war any longer; which whoever denies either hath ndt examined the state of the nation with respect to its debts, or denies it from the spirit of party. When a friend of mine objected this to lord Nottingham, lie freely confessed it wat a thine he had never considered. But, however, he would be against any peace without Spain j and why? because he was not privy seal. But then, why doth he vote with the whigs in every thing else, although peace hath ho concern? because he was not privy seal. I hope, my lord, we shall in time unriddle

you many a dark problem, and let you fee /
